An idiot's guide to climate change rainn wilson

On The Office, Rainn Wilson's Dwight Schrute lets out his rage about the climate crisis with the alter ego Recyclops... who eventually renounces Earth Day, vows to destroy the planet — and so does Wilson. (And he's the first to admit it.) Before the coronavirus pandemic struck, Wilson set out on an international journey through Greenland and Iceland (which he admits racked up a regrettably large carbon footprint, that he'll be offsetting) to learn about the climate crisis and how to be an activist. Wilson documented his travels for a new six-part Guide to Climate Change, produced by his content studio SoulPancake. The series shows Wilson's transition from "an every-day, well-intentioned, but uninformed, liberal to strident climate activist" according to press materials sent to Green Matters. Article continues below advertisement "My trip to Greenland and Iceland was amazing," Wilson tells Green Matters exclusively via email. "I saw my first glacier and talked to more nerdy scientists than I ever have in my life. But I also left my trip feeling terribly concerned. My conversation with Greta Thunberg put things in perspective for me: I need to take action and use my platform to encourage people to learn more about the climate crisis and vote for platforms that support the science, so that's what I'm doing." Source: SoulPancake/YouTubeArticle continues below advertisementAs pretty much any show with Rainn Wilson is guaranteed to do, An Idiot's Guide to Climate Change will certainly make viewers laugh — but it also aims to teach viewers what they can do to protect the planet and fight the climate crisis. In each episode, Wilson sits down with a different climate activist or scientist to learn more about their area of expertise. His most high-profile meeting is with Greta Thunberg, who teases him by holding up a Get Smart DVD and asking for Steve Carell's autograph. Article continues below advertisement Article continues below advertisementArticle continues below advertisementAs the series goes on, Wilson will also meet with Dr. David Hik, an arctic scientist; Dr. Gail Whiteman, a Professor of Sustainability at Lancaster University; Dr. Jennifer Francis, and Katie Eder, Future Coalition's Executive Director. An Idiot's Guide to Climate Change debuts today on the SoulPancake Youtube Channel, and new episodes will drop every Tuesday. In case you need further convincing to watch, Wilson describes the show as his "idiotic way of exploring this extremely non-idiotic issue." When it comes to climate change, Rainn Wilson has one crucial request: "Don't be an idiot." If that message sounds familiar to fans of The Office, it's because it's the best piece of advice that Michael Scott ever gave Wilson's character, Dwight K. Schrute. Now, Wilson is passing those same words of wisdom along in the hopes of encouraging people to educate themselves on climate science and global warming. The words "climate change activist" might not immediately spring to mind when you think of The Office actor, but Wilson — who's vowed to use his platform to help raise awareness on the global climate crisis — wants to change that. In July, Wilson launched "An Idiot's Guide to Climate Change," a comical yet informative six-part docuseries on YouTube that he created with SoulPancake, the digital media/entertainment company he co-founded in 2009 that focuses on creating positive, impactful content. In the series, Wilson embarks on a quest to better understand climate change basics and how individuals can help combat its dangerous effects on the planet. He visits Iceland to learn about carbon dioxide (CO2) emissions, travels to Greenland to get a firsthand look at melting glaciers, and speaks with a series of seasoned experts and young activists. Wilson has always cared about the environment, but after seeking out a deeper understanding of climate change he's more determined than ever to take action and help protect the planet. What moved Wilson to action I always believed in the science of climate change, I just was never really doing anything about it," Wilson explained in a phone interview with Mashable. "And by the way, that word 'belief' is a very, very strange word. One doesn't believe in science, science just is." Until recently, Wilson described himself as a slacktivist — someone who takes part in simple activist efforts that aren't super impactful. After checking in with himself and questioning his hypocrisy, Wilson felt compelled to take on more responsibility."[I thought,] 'Rainn, this is something you seem to care about. You read the articles, and you are concerned about your son, and your son, and their children, and their children, and the future of the planet that you love so much. But the only thing that you do literally is send out an occasional angry tweet about it. And you've got to do a hell of a lot more, both in your personal life and in your role as a public figure in the media," he said. Credit: soulpancake Shortly after Wilson's epiphany, he met Lancaster University Professor of Sustainability Dr. Gail Whiteman, who founded Arctic Basecamp, a nonprofit that researches rapid climate change in the Arctic and presents their findings to world leaders at World Economic Forum (WEF) annual meeting at Davos." I got involved in her nonprofit endeavor and that's when she invited me to come to Greenland," Wilson said. Seeing the effects of climate change up closeAfter taking an informative stroll around Reykjavík, Iceland, with astronomer and climate activist Sævar Helgi Bragason, Wilson learned about reduced CO2 emissions at an Icelandic Toyota factory and made his way to Greenland's ice sheet, which is melting at unprecedented rates. Melting glaciers in Greenland. But it has tremendous impact down here on the extreme weather patterns," Wilson continued. Dr. David Hik educating Wilson on "An Idiot's Guide to Climate Change." Credit: soulpancake "It can seem overwhelming, but there are a series of repercussions, domino effects, chain reactions — whatever you want to call them — with global warming," Wilson said. "It's not just that the weather's getting warmer and we're having more heat waves. That's why they call it climate change seems like an impossibly challenging issue to tackle. Wilson still has hope. While larger efforts from companies, industries, and governments are undoubtedly needed to make real headway in the fight against climate change, the reality is that individuals can still help make a difference, "[Dwight's] a diehard environmentalist." If you're a fan of The Office who simply clicked on this article because you miss the show, the man who played Dwight wants you to start caring more about the planet. And he's confident that his beet-farming, bear-loving Office character would want that too." I think Dwight is part right-wing nutjob, but he's a diehard environmentalist. And he would never let party override his passion for the science and his passion for the planet, as witnessed by his dedication to Recyclops," Wilson confidently explained. So if you're looking for ways to take action, here are Wilson's suggestions. Aside from taking a few hours to educate yourself about the science of climate change, the actor says it's crucial to vote for leaders who believe in science and take scientists seriously."Our nation needs to work in confluence with other nations," Wilson said, stressing the urgency at which the United Nations pact in 2019, and America officially exited the agreement on Nov. 4, 2020. President-elect Joe Biden has pledged to reenter it once he takes office.) Wilson also urges people to embrace more sustainable lifestyles. In particular, he emphasizes eating more alternative meats, which have proven beneficial in the fight against climate change. Another thing that gives Wilson hope is "the number of young people who are devoted, dedicated, impassioned climate activists. "Wilson spoke with young change — and climate activist Greta Thunberg in his series. He emphasized how deeply he admires and applauds all the members of younger generations who are powerfully taking a stand. You haven't seen the last of Rainn "Recyclops" WilsonThough Wilson's YouTube series has ended, his climate crisis with shows like Now What?, a new series hosted by Tessa Claire Hersh that has an episode dedicated to fighting for climate justice. As for Wilson, he plans to continue working on the board of Arctic Basecamp and has a few exciting events coming up in conjunction with the World Economic Forum, along with the 2021 United Nations Climate Change Conference in Glasgow, Scotland. "We're going to be doing a series of events — some of them are for upper-level people involved in governments and corporations, and then some of them are going to be for the public," Wilson said. "We're going to do a virtual Arctic base camp and have a big event with musicians and get my new good buddy, Billie Eilish to take part in that." Rainn Wilson thinking amidst melting glaciers. Credit: soulpancake Wilson hopes fans will tune in to learn more about the climate crisis and remember they can help create positive change is that we feel like 'Oh, what can I do? I'm just one person. This is such a big issue. This has to do with 7 billion people on the planet and has to do with oil companies, and giant corporations, and manufacturing... What good do I do?" Wilson said. "And the truth is, not a whole lot. But if everyone continues to think that way, nothing will get done." It feels like one person doesn't make a difference... but if we get 100,000 people changing their lifestyles, that's gonna make a little difference. And if it's 10 million, even more, If it's 10 to watch on YouTube
